Criminal Justice Program to Add New Courses

The Criminal Justice Program regularly looks to add new course selections to ensure our students the broadest and most diverse criminal justice education. Since so many of our students are looking at going on to a four year degree, we are adding five new courses designed to introduce you to the theory based courses common at the University level. The following new courses will “debut” in either fall 2011 or spring 2012.

The five new courses we are adding are:

Domestic and Sexual Violence: This course is designed to examine the various expressions of violence within the family structure, including child abuse, spouse and partner abuse, and elder abuse. Topics will also include sexual abuse, sexual assault, stalking, and domestic homicide. Topics will include the psychological and social causes of domestic and sexual violence.

Advanced Juvenile Delinquency: This course will examine juvenile delinquency and the juvenile justice system, including its legal and social history, its definitions and procedures, and an assessment of delinquency prevention and control.

Contemporary Issues in Criminal Justice: This course will offer an extensive examination of selected contemporary issues in criminal justice.

Introduction to Criminal Justice Research

Methods: The primary goal of this course is for students to recognize and understand the basics of research structure within the criminal justice and criminology disciplines. Upon successful completion of this course, students will have an understanding of the social scientific approach, which includes the fundamental concepts of ethics, research design, data collection and analysis, and finally interpretation.

Introduction to Theories of Criminal Behavior:

This course presents the major theoretical explanations of crime and criminal behavior. The course focuses on the historical development of criminological theory based on various definitions of crime. The primary purpose of this course is to provide a clear overview of the major academic explanations (or theories) that dominate criminology in an effort to clarify what is known about crime based upon empirical research.

◆ Denotes a seminar that is part of the SGA-sponsored National Society of Leadership and Success program

“Persuasion is the process of convincing an opponent to change his or her beliefs and/or behavior through moral or logical argument (rather than force). When someone is persuaded to do something, they do it because they have come to believe it is the right thing or the best thing to do. They thus do it willingly, even gladly, not grudgingly, as they do when they are forced to do something against their will.”
