Covington – “The Rising”

“Teaching and Learning Rhythms” is the Topic for the next Faculty Success Seminar

The next topic in the Fall 2011 Faculty Success Seminar Series focuses on creating a learning rhythm in the classroom. The seminar is scheduled for Friday, Oct. 7 beginning at 1pm, and is funded by a grant from the HCC Foundation. The presentation is free and open to all HCC faculty members.

According to seminar sponsor Magna Publications, “Teaching is, in many ways, a performance art. When you approach the podium, you are much like an actor taking the stage.

“You never know exactly what is going to happen in the classroom and how students are going to respond to the material you present.

“Because of this ever-present uncertainty, you want to be both in the moment and aware of the moment, sensing when to go with the flow, and when to help shape the flow.

“Your ultimate goal as a teacher is to become a spectator, as students become engaged with the course material and take charge. Ideally, leadership is handed back and forth in the classroom, in a delicate balancing act.

“Believe it or not, there is a method to creating these ideal learning conditions.

“In this 90 minute seminar, multiple teaching award winner Alex Fancy of Mount Allison University¹ trains professors and instructors in how to capture that elusive flow when teaching seems effortless and students are excited and eagerly involved in learning.”
