Statement Analysis
(8 Hours)
When conducting an interview it is important to know if the subject is telling you the truth. Many investigators rely on nonverbal cues to determine if a person is being deceptive. However, a nonverbal gesture does not always equate to deception. A more accurate way of detecting deception is to use Statement Analysis®.

Statement Analysis is the process of examining the words a person uses in an effort to determine if the subject is being truthful or deceptive. Even though people may lie and withhold information their words will betray them. There are usually several ways you can phrase a statement. People will always word their statement based on all their knowledge. Therefore, their statement may contain information they did not intend to share. People will give you more information than what they realize. The key to detecting deception is to listen to what people are saying and to know what to look for in their statement.

In this seminar, retired Deputy U.S. Marshal Mark McClish will share his Statement Analysis techniques on how to analyze a verbal and written statement to detect deception. He will also provide insight on how to obtain additional information from a statement. By using excerpts from today’s headlines, Mark gives a presentation that is current and unforgettable. When you use the Statement Analysis techniques you will know exactly what a person is telling you…
